STEALING BARS OF SOAP FROM PARTIES SINCE 1997

EDITORIAL I keep getting older, but they stay the same age

BY FATHER WHOSE CHILDREN HAVE DIED

Growing up, I was always told how difficult life would be once I became a father, but that could not be further from the truth. Each of my three children have brought such joy to my life. And the best thing about being a father is that, even though all three of them are now dead, as I keep getting older they will always stay the same age.

Popular opinion tells us that a parent's greatest fear is to outlive their children. Surprisingly enough, I found this to be the most rewarding experience of all. I appreciate all the things I took for granted before becoming a father. For example, I never knew how much I would miss having a good night's rest until I had a baby constantly waking me at odd hours of the night. Now I can sleep for as long as I want. I never realized how important it was to wear a condom while having sex.

Now I wear one even when I am not having sex. I can go out all night without worrying about the babysitter watching over the kids. Now I can have sex with the babysitter whenever I want to, rather than just after I take her home.

“I'm happy that they can remain forever etched in my memory as the perfect angels they were.”

Area girlfriend insists she fine, it whatever

THE COLONY, TX — It was early Sunday morning when, despite her boyfriend's frequent inquiries and constant fretting over her silence and dismissive gestures, local girlfriend Peg Becker insisted that she was fine, and that it was whatever. “I guess it started last night when we were getting drinks with my friends from high school, but I kind of pretended not to notice until this morning,” boyfriend Rudy Carlton told reporters under his breath while he watched Becker, his girlfriend of ten months, in the living room flipping through magazines loudly. “It's crazy how desperate and clingy she can make me feel just by folding her arms and looking out a window. She's going to make a really great mother.” At press time, Becker could be heard reorganizing dishes and silverware in the kitchen.

Area man not sure which way to swipe sister on

Tinder

AUSTIN — Adrift in a rollicking sea of conflicting emotions, area man John Clovis found that he was unsure which way to swipe his sister on Tinder. “I know society traditionally frowns on this sort of thing, but I dunno, “Game of Thrones” and “19 Kids and Counting” are on TV now. Maybe the cultural tide is shifting,” said Clovis, with an agonized chuckle and a frigid sweat upon his brow. “I'll probably end up swiping left, but what if she swiped right for me? I mean this would be our only way to figure out if this was meant to be, right?” At press time, Clovis could be found fretting over whether the recently added ‘Superlike’ feature would change his decision.

Point: Love is just a clever piece of chemical trickery that originates in the brain. The deepest, most profound sense of longing is nothing more than a fabrication.

You don't know what love is. Your idea of willed control over sentiments is illusory and naïve. You are a stupid girl to think anything you experience is more than a biological firing of neurons. I pity, nay, detest your inability to grasp such a simple concept. To put it simply, you don't know what love is.

Counterpoint: Is that a no on Denny's for tonight?

Look, if you don't want to go out with me, that's fine. I was just making conversation when I said I love Denny's $4 Grand Slam. I seriously think you're over analyzing things. You should just be grateful I'm still around, because the fact is this is the worst conversation I've had in weeks. Instead of attacking my word choice why don't you go take a fucking shower, burn that fedora, and learn some basic socialization skills.

Brilliant physics professor struggling to turn on projector

AUSTIN — After the first twenty-seven minutes of class were spent in an ill-fated battle with classroom equipment, the entire M E 357 advanced slinky mechanics class realized that Dr. Ben Klor would be yet again unable to get the projector started. “Professor Klor is incredible—he singlehandedly revolutionized the way we model the movement of helical springs down stairs,” said the class TA, while Dr. Klor began slamming his fist upon the projector. “I really hope he gets it working today. Last Thursday we had to cancel class because he'd been pressing the computer's volume button instead of the power button. But today's lecture is going to be a real treat—just wait 'til these kids get a taste for the nuances of Hooke's law!” As of press time, three different students were debating telling Dr. Klor that the projector wasn't plugged in.

Study shows $40k loan debt only worth two hours of studying night before test

AUSTIN — Using the simple mathematical concept known as ‘ratios,’ a recent study at the University of Texas at Austin shows that a $40k loan debt is only worth about two hours of studying the night before a big test. “Everyone knows your debt is proportional to how hard you worked in college,” said Lead Researcher Maurice Castle, pointing to some detailed graphics on his laptop. “We tried using three hours or four hours for our calculations but two hours is really where you get the most value for your money.” As of press time, the research lab was trying to find out how many 7/11 burritos a college tuition is worth.

Area girl eagerly refreshing likes on Facebook post about dead grandmother

SALEM, MA — Carefully containing her excitement, area middle schooler Stephanie Howell reportedly clicked the refresh button on her Internet Explorer web browser for the second time in the past ten seconds to see if more people had liked her post about her recently deceased grandmother. “I'm just, like, really sad about mee-maw being dead and stuff, and I just felt like it was totally necessary for me to share it with others to let people with dead grandmas know they're not alone,” said Howell as she debated which pictures of her and her grandmother would get the most likes. “I know Ashley has seen this post because she's always on Facebook, so I don't know why she hasn't liked it yet. She's probably just upset that this post might beat the 148 likes on her post about Veterans Day or whatever.” At press time, Howell could be seen scrolling through the list of likes on her iPhone while her mother sobbed violently on the couch across from her.

GPA begins annual migration south

AUSTIN — After a thrilling excursion through mediocrity, UT student Christopher McNutt's GPA has officially begun its annual migration south. “I stop taking notes in, like, October, so my GPA just doesn't have enough sustenance to survive during the winter months,” McNutt told reporters while staring emptily into the Interactive Degree Audit webpage. “I just have to wait for it to come back in the spring, and somehow it miraculously does every year.” As of press time, McNutt was seen compiling a list of all of his life ambitions he is eager to accomplish before the chilly winter weather settles in.

Guy in Spanish class still asking about the dirty words

LOS ANGELES — First-year Spanish student Raymond Alexander continues his role as class ass with a 52 day streak of asking his teacher the best curse words in the language. “Honestly, Senorita-what's-her-face needs to recognize that these words would be the most useful to me when I'm talking trash with mi amigos,” spewed Alexander as he tried researching local gangs taking applications. “Senorita is always getting mad at me for askin' the same question over and over again, but I get a laugh from my buddy Paco every time. I'm just tryin' to take her advice to ‘take an interest in my education.’” As of press time, Alexander was seen trying to pick up curse words from a particularly cartel heavy episode of Breaking Bad.

Grandfather survives World War II so grandson can get liberal arts degree

SANTA BARBARA, CA — Thanks to his grandfather's heroism during World War II, college junior Jimmy Jankowski is now free to pursue his dream of getting a liberal arts degree. “I like to think that grandpa's valor was less about stopping Hitler, and more about enabling me to pursue my dreams,” said the American Studies major, who is currently researching Lady Gaga and how her music is shaping today's world. “Grandpa's bravery is just crazy to me. Storming the beaches of Normandy, getting his leg blown off by a grenade, and still killing dozens of Nazi soldiers. He got a Purple Heart and a Bronze Star. Perhaps the only person who could possibly match his gallantry is Lady Gaga, who fearlessly withstands attack after attack from her legions of haters.” The elder Jankowski—who has yet to figure out who or what Lady Gaga is—was last seen sitting alone in his retirement home, staring out the window, disappointed that his sacrifices were a complete waste.

People on first date excited to never go out again

NEW YORK — After a painful first date, young singles Mandy Nelson and Todd O'Neill are thrilled to call it quits. “When I swiped right on Tinder, yeah, I thought he looked a little bit like my cousin Todd,” said Nelson, adjusting her eye patch. “It wasn't until he sat down and I saw how prematurely he was balding that I realized it was my cousin! Sure, we experimented as children. But dinner and a movie just kind of crosses a line.” As of press time, both cousins had RSVP'd ‘no’ to Thanksgiving dinner at Grandma Kathy's.

Dad ruins Thanksgiving by showing up

Waking up bright and early to fix up a beautifully layered three-bread stuffing, to set the table with the fine china plates and crystal glassware, and to make sure the Macy's Thanksgiving Parade was on so nobody would miss out on their favorite floats, local dad Hank Cohen reportedly ruined his family's Thanksgiving feast just by being there at all. According to sources close to the family, Cohen, while a loving and charismatic father, just can't overcome the crippling lameness that is being a dad in his mid forties enough to have any sort of relevance in his family's life.

"You know, I just love them, because, in a lot of ways, they are me," Hank said of his family as he whispered "you can do this" to himself in an attempt to muster up the courage to walk into his son's room and wake him up for the festivities. "What we have is an irreversible bond, a love that can never be broken."

"He's alright I guess," said Thomas Cohen, the 15-year-old son of Hank, as he refreshed the same reddit page on his phone. "He just... He's a guy that is just there, you know? He's not really horrible in any major way, which actually, now that I'm thinking about it, may be a fault. Maybe if he was just horrible he'd have some sort of thing, some sort of personality. Right now he mostly just listens to rock music and makes dinner."

After the Thanksgiving dinner was served and the dishes were cleaned, the family went outside and pretended to enjoy a game of touch football.

"He thinks we enjoy this, so we just kind of go along with it," said Jenny Cohen, Hank's 23-year-old daughter, as she acted like she was paying attention while her father laid out an extensive play. "He's innocent though, so we just sort of play along. It's funny, acting like you're having fun can almost be like having fun, but it's really not the same." When asked whether or not they thought they were taking their father's love and care for granted, especially at a time where giving thanks is part of the holiday spirit, Thomas and Jenny responded, in unison, "No, not really."

Area dad not sure whether to acknowledge teen daughter's new boobs

LOS ANGELES — Despite the fact that he had consulted numerous sources, single father Greg Reynolds is unsure of the appropriate way to address his daughter's recent breast augmentation. "I've been searching for tips everywhere. I borrowed every book in the parenting section," sighed Reynolds, flipping through the local library's copy of What to Expect When You're Expecting. "For whatever reason, none of the experts have any advice for how a father is supposed to deal with this type of situation." As of press time, Reynolds was still unable to make eye contact or speak coherently to his confused but now well-endowed daughter.

Study finds unarmed black teens less likely to commit crimes once shot by police

AUSTIN — Following the recent introduction of a highly controversial policing technique, a study conducted by St. Louis Community College-Florissant Valley found that unarmed black teens are indeed less likely to commit crimes once they have been shot by police. "We've had a hunch about this for quite some time," said Officer Guy Whitman, pausing to yank his pants up by the belt loops and hock a generous phlegm-like loogie into a water bottle, which was doubling as a dip-spit container. "We experienced a lot of backlash from people calling this policy 'vile,' 'atrocious,' and 'reminiscent of Hitler's Germany,' but we know it works. It's a simple fact: the policy is proven to be 100% effective." As of press time, Whitman could be seen speeding away in his 2001 Ford F-150 after stealing several packs of cigarillos from a convenience store, the confederate flag whipping in the wind behind him.

Area women excited to fake having hobbies for winter break

AUSTIN — Twenty-year-old UT student, Kylie Lovelace, can hardly contain her excitement to fake new and relaxing hobbies of stamp collecting and gardening this winter break, sources say. "I'd hate for anybody to know I'll be spending all break sitting in my room watching Mushishi," said Lovelace as she photoshopped herself into a Better Homes and Gardens ad. "I mean, actually gardening during winter break would be, like, tough, you know? Because it's FREEZING out. But I need to give my followers some sort of, like, gesture of my outdoorsiness." As of press time, Lovelace was seen changing her LinkedIn profile picture to a photo of a rare stamp of a bald eagle attacking a Nazi.

College student on budget buying bottled water for some reason

AUSTIN — Despite his tight budget, college student Steve Lando is still buying bottled water for some reason. "I love the way filtered water tastes coming out of that plastic teat. Plus, it gives me an opportunity to recycle," said Lando, as he placed a framed picture of a compost pile above his hearth. "Where would the world be if I was drinking water out of a glass? I am saving the earth one empty water bottle at a time." At press time, Lando was seen emptying water bottles into the Littlefield Fountain.

Falling flood light crushes wrong theater kid

IOWA CITY, IA — In the wake of a heartbreaking tragedy that caused the death of some random sound kid, the Iowa City Theater Troupe is mourning the failure of their attempt to get rid of a particular cast member by pushing over a floodlight. "We're all just trying to manage at this point," said understudy Katie Jacobson while holding back tears. "I just can't believe it didn't hit Madison Smith, whose dad just paid for her to get this part. We've been trying to kill her for months." At press time, Jacobson could be seen throwing away an invitation to the sound kid's memorial service, which will be held next Sunday at the local Baptist church.

Grandmother refuses to blink until you ask for seconds

OAK CLIFFE, TX — During a trip to visit his Abuelita Terca, Rory Canales' grandmother sat him down at the dinner table and refused to blink until he asked for seconds. "I only wanted to drop off a forged will leaving her '64 Mustang in my name, but she already had a plate of mole ready for me," said Canales, scooping a spoonful of mole into his mouth. "Her coke-bottle eyeglasses were unmoving. I think I saw mothballs in her eyelashes." At press time, Caneles finally broke and asked for seconds before throwing the leftover mole into his pants pocket.

Area man hopes to impress nurse with his height and weight this time

AUSTIN — Local man Corey Cody is eagerly looking forward to his doctor appointment this afternoon, when he plans to impress the nurse with his improved height and weight. "I've filled most of my cavities with coins to increase my weight, and I'm wearing five pairs of socks to look taller," said Cody as a penny fell out of his mouth. "Maybe this time the nurse will tell me I'm a big boy." As of press time, Cody was last seen trying to fit a Sacajawea dollar up his nose.

Group chat from high school hanging on by thread

PEORIA, IL — Despite countless opportunities for convenient communication, Francis Stilmore's once tight knit high school friend group has fallen almost entirely out of contact, except for a single group chat hanging on by a thread. "We used to talk about life and the mysteries of the universe and the cheat codes to our favorite video games, but ever since college started, things have taken a turn," said Stilmore, who—as the one remaining active member—constantly refreshes the phone in his two-in-one wallet phone case. "I think their phones must be broken or something, because nobody responds to my conversational gold." At press time, Stilmore had just messaged the group about whether or not anyone had seen the new Star Wars trailer.

Area mom passing on racist legacy to sleeping toddler

BIRMINGHAM, AL — During her three-year-old daughter's naptime this Monday, local mom Fran Norwood hoped to impart her long-held racist views to her child subconsciously by whispering them into her ear as she slept. "There's no way she would accept these blatantly hateful and prejudiced views through reason, so I need to communicate my message while she slumbers," explained Norwood through her hood, as she welcomed her new neighbors with a burning cross in their front yard. "Twenty years down the road, she'll be writing a manifesto on her blog and she won't even know why." At press time, Norwood was leaning over her child, reciting The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn and leaving out every word that isn't a slur.

my type. I also might be a little sick," reasoned the indecisive Augustine, feeling like tonight just probably isn't the night. "I mean if I go talk to that girl and it goes well, will she want to start dating me? I have to go out of town next weekend and wouldn't be able to see her, so it's probably best if I avoid that possible conflict." At press time, Augustine could be seen swiftly averting his gaze after making accidental eye contact with a girl at another table.

Commercial break just long enough to eat seven

Filet-o-Fish

PITTSBURGH — During a particularly riveting episode of Cake Boss, avowed McDonald's fan Rick Humpf discovered that the second commercial break was just long enough for him to eat seven Filet-o-Fish. "Most of these commercial breaks are just long enough for three Filet-o-Fish, or perhaps two and a side of fries, or one whole McRib. Trust me, I've done the math," said Humpf, picking an especially unsavory crumb o-fish out of his goatee. "I think I've either accepted my powerlessness against the capitalist machine we call television advertising or I just can never get enough of the greasy, gooey Mickey D sandwich. Either way, bring on the commercials. More, more, I say." At press time, Humpf was found wolfing down a truly unholy McFlurry-McGriddle combination while he waited for Property Brothers to come back on.

Narcissist uses self-checkout lane

AUSTIN — After selecting ten hand-sized mirrors at the local CVS, narcissist Billy D. Dang decided to use the self-checkout lane. "Huh, this tabloid cover photo of The Sexiest Man Alive George Clooney sure reminds me of myself," said Dang, his voice loud enough for the entire store to hear. "My girlfriend's mom just died, but did you notice I got my septum pierced?" As of press time, Dang was seen waiting for the automatic doors to close so he could check out his reflection one more time.

Man wakes up from coma to turn off alarm

TACOMA, WA — After a two year coma, a patient at Beacon Valley Hospital, Abel Hobbs, woke up to turn off an alarm on his fiancée's cell phone before immediately slipping back into his coma. "That son of a bitch, I know he is faking it," said Hobbs' fiancée, Sierra Pitts, as she repeatedly punched Hobbs in the gall bladder, looking for signs of pain in his face. "Wake up and marry me you piece of trash coward!" As of press time, Hobbs remains comatose and single.

Reverse psychology major claims he totally a virgin

CHICAGO — With a knowing wink and a sly smile, local Reverse Psychology major Jacob Esteban announced during his class presentation last Thursday that he was totally a virgin, and had definitely never engaged in coital acts of any sort. "I just can't stress how much sex I've never had," said Esteban while mime-drawing a chastity belt over his crotch area and throwing away the key. "I wouldn't even know what to do with a girl, that's how inexperienced I am." At press time, Esteban could be seen shrugging his shoulders while pointing to his genitalia.

A word from the Vice President...

You think the meme life is easy, huh? You think you can just become a world class curator of dank memes on a whim? Well let me tell you, you dang heck. From the instant I wake up to the nanosecond before I sleep, I am memeing. I am the admin on hundreds of meme boards and meme aggregators that allow me to meme at maximum efficiency. There is not a second that goes by without me thinking about memes and dank original content. My dad used to tell me that memes are the fundamental basis of life, and I take that real frackin' seriously. I am a dang meme machine and I bleed meme. So next time if you're doubting my meme abilities or how hard I meme, just take a step back and think about how much more dank I am than you and how much I toil for memes. I'll flipping end you, kid.

Sincerely,

Rohit Mandalapu
